Welcome!

Claude Debussy wrote his Piano Trio about 30 years after the youthful Piano Quintet by Camille Saint-Saëns (written around 1850), although it was not premiered until 1985! It is a small miracle that the manuscript of the score had resurfaced at an auction in the late 1970s, especially considering that Debussy wrote “one and only” piano trio. Despite the large output of piano compositions, Saint-Saëns’s Piano Quintet happens to be his only work for such configuration. As both works were produced during the composers’ formative years, they do not always showcase the highly unique characteristics that these iconic French composers are so well known for at the height of their maturity. However, the two stunning Romantic works will fascinate you with a glimpse of the prodigious talents and inspiration of these geniuses which later evolved into their signature “French” style.

It’s been a rather frigid winter. I now invite you to sit back and let the music warm your heart and soul!

Claude Debussy: Piano Trio in G Major

Claude Debussy was born in 1862, and after some early instruction on the piano, he enrolled at the Paris Conservatoire in 1872 at the age of 10. For the first few years, he made rapid progress. But beginning in about his fifth year of study, his professors began detecting an unwelcome rebelliousness in their student, and some of them complained that he was putting forth too little effort. Nevertheless, his piano teacher, Antoine Marmonte, recognizing Debussy’s extraordinary musicianship, recommended him for a seasonal position in the service of Nadezhda von Meck, a wealthy Russian businesswoman, music lover, and most notably, Tchaikovsky’s benefactor. Mme von Meck spent summers traveling to various upscale locations in Europe, taking along her family, several servants, tutors and musicians. Debussy’s duties as a domestic pianist included teaching and accompanying various family members, as well as serving as Mme von Meck’s duet partner.

In the late summer of 1880, the von Meck household sojourned in the town Fiesole, near Florence, where Debussy, joined by violinist Ladislav Pachulsky and cellist Piotr Danilchenko, played piano trios each evening. Encouraged by Mme von Meck to write a trio of his own, he completed his four-movement Trio in G major that September. On September 29 (Old Style), Mme von Meck wrote to Tchaikovsky: “My Frenchman also wrote a very beautiful trio I regret, dear friend, that I cannot send it to you for your review, because it will be impossible to copy since he is leaving in a few days.” It is not known if the Trio was performed publicly during Debussy’s lifetime, but von Meck’s letter suggests that the work was performed privately – or least sight-read – by the household trio in Fiesole.

Debussy sent the score to his harmony teacher, Emile Durand, with the inscription, “Many notes accompanied by much friendship,” but for a century after that, the Trio, aside from an autograph score of the first movement, was presumed lost. In the early 1980s American musicologist Elwood Derr discovered an autograph score of the other three movements among materials bequeathed to the University of Michigan’s School of Music by the late pianist Maurice Dumesnil, who had been a student of Debussy. Twenty measures were missing, but using a cello part available from another source, Derr reconstructed those missing measures, and the German firm Henle published the Trio in 1986.
In a 1985 article in the journal Neue Zeitschrift für Musik, Derr asserted that the chief stylistic influences on the Trio were the works of Robert Schumann and César Franck, two composers with whom Debussy was no doubt familiar. Aesthetically, however, the Trio is probably more akin to the works of Massenet (whose style Mme von Meck detected in Debussy’s music), Fauré, and Delibes. Critics have faulted the Trio for lacking the thematic unity and formal integrity that we hear in the composer’s mature works, comparing the Trio to pretty salon music. However, the many harmonic shifts reveal the young composer’s urge to unshackle himself from the stringent rules imposed on students at the Conservatoire, and the clever interweaving of melodic lines illustrate Debussy’s proficiency in writing counterpoint.

The work is in four movements: The opening Andantino con moto allegro, with its flowing and very French-sounding opening theme in semiquavers contrasting with a lyrical second theme; the Scherzo – Intermezzo, featuring pizzicatos and inventive counterpoint between the strings; the Andante espressivo, anchored by an unabashedly sentimental melody introduced by the cello; and the finale (Appassionato), built around two energetic melodies in 6/8 meter.

Camille Saint-Saëns: Piano Quintet in A Minor, Op. 14

Camille Saint-Saëns, born in 1835, was true child prodigy. He composed his first piece before his fourth birthday, and debuted as a concert pianist, performing concertos by Mozart and Beethoven, at age 10. He entered the Paris Conservatoire at age 13, where he studied organ, piano, and composition. By the time he started writing his only piano quintet, probably at age 20, he had completed his conservatory studies and had already composed his Symphony No. 1, at least two dozen songs, a set of pieces for harmonium, and a passel of student pieces. Not surprisingly, the Piano Quintet in A minor, probably written in 1855, shows remarkable maturity, and is rightly placed in the company of his later chamber works.

Piano quintets composed in the early eighteenth century were almost always scored for violin, viola, cello, contrabass and piano; such is the instrumentation of Franz Schubert’s celebrated “Trout” Quintet. It was not until 1842 that a major nineteenth century composer – Robert Schumann – produced a work for two violins, viola, cello and piano, subsequently regarded as the standard piano quintet instrumentation.

It would be inaccurate, however, to draw a straight line from Schumann’s Piano Quintet in E-flat to Saint-Saëns’s Piano Quintet in A minor. By the time the young French composer left the Conservatoire in 1853, he had become intimately familiar with a huge body of music: the great works of Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, and Schubert, as well music by Parisian composers past and present. One could assert that the Piano Quintet was in many ways the result of the composer’s ability to absorb the styles and compositional techniques of a wide array of masters. The work reflects Saint-Saëns’s command of thematic development and counterpoint, as well as his inclination to employ cyclical forms. The piano is very much the featured instrument in this work; indeed, the work has many of the characteristics of a piano concerto.

Saint-Saëns dedicated the Quintet to his great-aunt Charlotte Masson, who had been his first piano teacher.

The first movement, marked Allegro moderato e maestoso, begins with a solemn chordal introduction, played by the piano. Following this opening, three melodic ideas – two foreboding themes in A minor, and a relatively tranquil one in F major – are introduced and developed.

The second movement, Andante sostenuto, begins with a hymn-like theme in F major, played by the piano. The viola introduces the second theme, a lyrical melody soon taken up by the other strings. Before long the piano brings back the hymn-like tune, but this time the strings interpose between each phrase a whirling line in demisemiquavers that is later heard in counterpoint with the opening melody. The second movement leads without pause into the third: a furious Presto in the spirit of a Mendelssohn scherzo. The movement’s main melodic idea springs directly from the whirling line heard in the Andante sostenuto. The frenetic energy lets up slightly with the introduction of a lyrical melody midway through the movement. A reprise of the first movement’s opening material (this time played by the piano) brings the Presto to a close.

The finale begins with a Beethovenian fugato, played by the strings alone. When the piano enters, the two violins deliver the second theme, which throughout much of the movement is played in counterpoint with the fugato theme. About three and a half minutes into the movement, a melodic figure from the first movement makes a fleeting appearance, and at the end of the movement, that figure returns as the motivic material that drives the coda.

Featured Artist Chris Pontrelli: “I’m drawn to the power of simple icons generated by our society. I greatly admire the work of mid-20th century designers. Some believe they were taking cues from the jazz and bebop musicians of that same era. There is a quick, lightness to their forms – abbreviated, yet complete. It is with this visual shorthand that I express my own artistic vision. Like many artists and musicians throughout history, I’m fascinated by the comparison of the two genres. We hear of musicians trying to “paint” melodies with color. And we see artists striving to bring music into a visual form.

As a life-long musician I find it natural to include qualities found in music when painting. Like a popular song I want my artwork to have an accessible beat and a colorful rhythm. I strive to create motion where there would otherwise be stillness. With each piece I ask, “Can your eyes dance to this?” ”
